Prologue

The moon was full, and the clan had gone to the meeting between the clans. Everyone was tired and immediately fell asleep, except him. He knew tensions had been rising in the clans since the death of Riverclan's leader, it was so sudden; and bloody according to those that found the body. He walked up to the ledge by the entrance into camp, and sat down. He flicked his tail, looking over camp and its stillness. He sighed, there was nothing wrong in his clan. He looked up to the moon, it had been covered by the clouds at the meeting, but now it illuminated the forest. Usually when a leader died nine new stars would be in the sky, except the sky remained the same. The silence in camp stopped abruptly, a rustling could be heard in camp. His eyes widened and he jumped back into camp. "Who's there?" He hissed out quietly, dropping into a hunting crouch. He walked up against a wall, facing the moon. A figure jumped over a boulder, landing silently. He dashed forward, keeping in the shadows. The figure jumped at him, shrouded by the shadows. He could hear the blood pumping in his ears, and only smell fear. The figure pinned him down, and pressed down on him for a few heartbeats. The figure hopped up and left camp, out and into the shadows. 'What was that?' He thought, walking to the fresh-kill pile and he got the one shrew on the pile to eat. He felt additional tiredness from when they first got back because of the 'fight' with the mysterious figure. As he bit into the shrew a weird feeling was in his throat, it was itchy and scratchy, maybe a bit irritated. He once again heard light paw steps outside the den. He squinted his eyes, and tried to look out of the den, straining to see out the den from the darkness he was hidden in. He bent down to take another bite of the shrew, his throat itching even more. He tried to cough up the feeling in his throat, it just got worse. It felt like his throat was being clawed out, and he couldn't do anything.

The quiet paw steps he heard before had increased to a louder trot. He swung his head around, tail between his legs and ears pinned back. "W-who's there?" He called out shakily, standing up. A cat slowly walked up to him, ears pinned and tail lashing. He couldn't see any of their features, only that they were tall. The figure reeked of catmint, and had a strange herb-y smell on them that he had never smelled before. He stopped and fell back a bit because his throat felt like it was closing. He started hyperventilating trying to get enough air. The figure drove him back into the den, and knocked him over, causing him to cough violently. The figure stepped over him, sitting down and presumably watching as he tried to cough up what was plugging up his throat. He started writhing in pain, he felt like he was going to explode.

"Wh-what?" He managed choked out before starting to writhe again. The figure cloaked in darkness stood over him, unmoving. He tried to get up but his legs collapsed under him, "How..A-are you.." He croaked, trying to grip the ground with his claws as he writhed in pain. He pinned his ears back and hissed, trying to wake someone up. The figure swished their tail and pinned him down, hissing in a hoarse voice, "Stop whining. It'll be over soon." His eyes started shuttering and he hissed weakly, trying to stay awake. He felt his breathing stop, and moving drastically slowed. The noise of blood rushing in his ears stopped, and he froze. The figure clawed his eyes and muzzle, filling him with pain as he finally died. A last breath so to say didn't happen, he died in pain and breathless. The figure swished their tail over the body, lacing it with the smell of catmint. As they left it almost seemed the moon dimmed, and a smell of death befell the camp. The smell would lay there forever.
